MISS PECK AND SORATA.

Daring Explorer Tells of Her First Sight of the Andean Peak.

Simultaneously with the telegraphic report that Miss Annie S. Peck has successfully ascended Mount Sorata, a letter, the Outlook company announces, has been received in which the intrepid mountain climber tells of her first sight of the Andean peak, the highest on the western continent, a height heretofore unattained. Miss Peck writes:

"I see Sorata in the distance. It is magnificent, all covered with snow. Lanher, the guide, who is used to Alpine peaks, says it looks formidable—more so than he expected. Maguiz, the chief guide, is stolid. 'I will reach the summit whether any one else does or not,' says he. 'I say nothing. We may be delayed a long time by the snow.'"

The expedition of which Miss Peck is the leader is purely a scientific one, sent out primarily by the Outlook company. The perils of the climb are something more than ordinary even in dangerous mountain climbing. For 100 miles about the natives have long held the belief that something more than human power prevents the top being reached, and they have not looked with favor on any one who deliberately attempted the full ascent. The chief companion of Miss Peck on the expedition is Professor William G. T. Light of the University of New Mexico.

TO DIG ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Clergyman Would Exchange Philippines For Japanese Labor.

A novel proposition for disposing of the Philippine Islands has been made to President Roosevelt by the Rev. H. L. Atkinson, a pastor of Geneva, O., says a Washington special to the New York World. He wants the islands ceded to Japan, the conveyance to be conditioned upon the digging of whatever isthmian canal the United States decided to construct.

He believes it would be a fine trade, because, in his opinion, it would serve the best interests of the Philippines and because the loss of life would be smaller if the Japanese dug the canal than if the work were undertaken by American laborers.

Mr. Atkinson addresses the president as "His Excellency, President of the U. S. Theodore Roosevelt, Honored and Dear Sir." In closing he writes "From a busy pastor who loves to ponder international problems."

The letter was referred to the secretary of war.
